

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method for determining the optimum macronutrient content of a diet for an individual companion animal and for optimised diets determined according to such a method.

The invention provides a method by which an animal is able to select and consume preferred quantities of enriched food to optimise the macronutrient content of their diet.